A Critical Building Products Provider

As North America’s leading manufacturer of exterior building products, Cornerstone Building Brands products and services are essential to ensuring that critical infrastructure needs can continue to be met through the COVID-19 pandemic.

The ability to repair homes, hospitals, government buildings and other residential and commercial structures necessary to the continued safety of every person in the country, as well as ensuring the uninterrupted operation of essential industries, requires access to building materials. With widening shelter-in-place mandates and hurricane season just around the corner, this is important now more than ever.

Many building supply customers remain open to ensure people and industries have access to building products and components that help keep those they shelter safe and protected. Without our windows, doors, siding and roofing, they can’t continue to serve communities across the country, which are already over-burdened.

Securing the Critical Infrastructure Industry Supply Chain

Cooperation and coordination between private sector companies like building materials manufacturers and all levels of government is essential to mitigate the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic. A critical aspect of this is securing the supply chains of the critical infrastructure industries, which have been defined by the Department of Homeland Security, and thereby called upon to continue doing their good work throughout these uncertain times.

Enabling building products manufacturers to maintain continuity of operations and deliver a reliable and sustainable source of supplies and services for construction projects, including for residential housing, hospital and government buildings, is essential to preserving their resilience to services interruptions, natural disasters and other adverse events that can put them—and our communities—at risk.

Manufacturing’s Commitment to the Critical Infrastructure Industry

Those who work in or support critical infrastructure industries have a responsibility to maintaining operations to reduce risks to the communities they serve—particularly in times of widespread uncertainty. Our 23,000+ associates play an important role in supplying much-needed building materials and are committed to continuing to positively contribute to their communities.

Employers should support the social distancing and hygiene practices advised by the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), as well as enact significant preventative measures to ensure employee safety. These include putting policies in place that allow non-essential employees to work from home, requiring and accommodating social distancing practices and mandating that any employee experiencing symptoms of COVID-19 stay home and follow measures to prevent spread and protect their health in accordance with CDC guidelines. This is a responsibility that employers should embrace as they remain steadfast in their commitment to providing essential services.

Our Purpose:

Our building solutions are the cornerstone of the communities we serve.

From homes to hospitals, grade schools to grocery stores, manufacturing facilities to municipal buildings and beyond, every building we create, and every part of that building, positively contributes to communities where people live, work, and play.